Was President of First National Bank and Prosperous Gettysburg Business Man While Talking of Other Deaths.

Alexander Spangler died at his home on Carlisle street, between eleven and twelve o'clock on Wednesday night from kidney trouble and heart disease. He was aged 79 years, 10 months and 20 days.

Mr. Spangler had been in his usual health until Friday night. During the night he became ill and a physician was summoned. He continued to a serious condition until Wednesday evening when he seemed to be somewhat improved. He talked with his relatives and shortly after eleven o'clock he died.

Mr. Spangler was a gay and full life. Two of his brothers died under similar circumstances. Alexander Spangler was born in East Berlin, one of the eleven children of Mr. and Mrs. George Spangler. His father was a farmer. Until Mr. Spangler was twenty years old he was a farmer and a good horse raiser. He then went to his brother's home and also to the home of his brother, Charles Spangler, who was a farmer. He then moved to Dover, York county, and stayed there for several years in business and then moved to Gettysburg where he bought and sold real estate.

Mr. Spangler was always successful in business. By careful selection of his investments he was able to accumulate a large sum of money. He was a member of the First National Bank of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. He was a member of the First National Bank of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.
